

Everyone's downsizing on their UK holidays this year – except the wealthy

The cost of living crisis is reviving the staycation – but where will we be going? We spoke to industry insiders to find out

Staycations for the super-rich

Of course, for those rich enough, holidays will continue as they always have. In an attempt to keep these people in the UK, some venues and operators have upped their game, throwing out the cottage-core curtains and DIY attitude in favour of luxurious interiors more akin to Bali or Ibiza, as well as a full concierge service.

Among the new wave of self-catering properties is Terrarium in Bosham, Sussex, a seriously impressive mansion that's one of luxe self-catering agency Unique Homestays' most-scrolled options. Inspired by Thai spas and curling around a natural pool hemmed by slick sunloungers, it looks like a chic hotel and can be booked with accompanying massages and private catering.
